for was bowled by Wheeler after contributing 22, but Jarrett was not disposed of until he had registered 62, when he was unluckily run out. Drummer White displayed sound cricket for 42 and Private Owens played very carefully for 167, or a majority of 12. De Chair and Plumbie were credited with 3 wickets each, and Farquhar and Wheeler with two and one respectively.

In their second essay the naval representatives again made a creditable display, seven of the eleven getting into double figures, Farquhar was again top scorer with 32, Cooke quickly ran up 22 before running himself out, De Chair played well for 21, and Primrose contributed a very useful 21. The innings eventually closed for 157, the extras numbering 11. Duffin and Lenahan were the most successful bowlers for the Blues. With 146 to obtain to win the match, the Blues commenced an impossible task in the time available, but they nevertheless made a bold bid for victory, Gordon and Jarrett were sent in on a slopping campaign, and they faithfully carried out instructions, by knocking the bowling all over the field, treating all the naval trundlers with strict impartiality. Gordon had a life or two, and Jarrett had several narrow escapes, and as usual under similar circumstances, they did not forget to avail themselves of their good fortune. No separation was effected until the score reached 115, when Jarrett was smartly caught by Farquhar off Cooke, having compiled 38 by indiscriminate hitting. Drummer White was next man in, but after totalling 4 he gave Stoford on easy chance, which was accepted, and Dumbury took the vacant wicket. Time was soon afterwards called, the score then standing at 121 for a wicket, Gordon carrying out his bat amidst loud applause for a hard hit 73.

The following are the scores:—

THE QUESTION IN TONGKIN.

The negotiations which are in progress between the Chinese Ambassador and the French Minister for Foreign Affairs, according to a writer in the New York Sun, show a disposition on both sides to prevent the Annamite affair from engendering a trial of strength between France and China. The pretensions, however, of the two powers are so conflicting that it is hard to see how they can be reconciled without a sacrifice of the material interests of one of the parties to the controversy. If the treaty of Hue is so far sustained as to permit of the assertion of a French protectorate over the whole of Annam, the recognition of Chinese supremacy would be merely nominal, and the Chinese residents would find themselves on precisely the same footing as other foreigners, that is to say, they would be subject to the French tribunals. Should, on the other hand, the proposition of the Marquis Tseng be accepted, and it be decided that China's claim to overlordship, the French should agree to leave a neutral zone between the Tonkinese and Chinese frontiers, they would be exposed to incessant predatory attacks, and would find trade with Yunnan, the main object of their efforts, entirely impracticable.

The position originally taken by M. Challemel-Lacour—the basis on which the treaty of Hue was recently concluded—was that China has no business to interfere with the quarrel between France and Annam her claim to supremacy over the latter country being treated as a pure fiction. M. Bourde was recalled for acknowledging the validity of that claim, and his successor, M. Tricou, was instructed to deny it altogether. In pursuance of this policy, the concessions extracted from the ostensible ruler of Annam, after the capture of the harbour of Saigon, his capital, included an express disclaimer of Chinese authority. This attitude should not have been taken unless the French were resolved to maintain it at the cost of a war with the Middle Kingdom. The information received from M. Bourde, and the sharp rebuff experienced by M. Tricou, should have taught the French Foreign Office that it would be useless to try to browbeat China. In this instance, and that France would have either to fight or submit, part of its exorbitant demands. No doubt, the Peking Government is weak, and has good reason to feel that its very existence might be imperilled by an unsuccessful contest with a European power. It would be equally certain, however, to lose the prestige by which alone it manages to maintain its hold upon a disaffected people, should it submit without a struggle to the extinction of rights which it has been for months asserting with so much firmness. Even the present Manchu dynasty may be forced to fight for its life, and the French blunder in driving it into a corner, unless they are prepared to face the war which would be the logical and inevitable outcome of their policy.

The truth is that M. Challemel-Lacour has been trying to play a game of bluff in Tongkin, and that he has failed. He is an advocate of having China named called. He is not in the least anxious to engage in a war, which would probably give rise to wide complications, and which might have quite as grave consequences for the French Republic as for the Manchu dynasty. Since the defeat of General Bonin by the Black Flag, the French Cabinet must recognize the danger that Tongkin itself may prove a second Mexico, and it cannot be blind to the grin of satisfaction with which Bismarck heart the ceaseless outcry for reinforcements against the country. The French Government knows that the declaration of the last war with China cannot again be hoped for; that Peking has since been rendered impregnable to any force which France in view of its perilous situation at home, could afford to send abroad; that in other words, the Middle Kingdom could only be coerced by a blockade of the treaty ports. But a blockade, to be legal, must be effectual; a mere proclamation is not worth the paper on which it is written. To establish a blockade which should be effective and thus valid by international law, of the treaty ports and all the great navigable rivers of China, would require the concerted and persistent action of the whole French navy. But when would the ships get coal? France has but one coaling station in the waters of eastern Asia, namely, Saigon, which is many hundreds of miles from the nearest Chinese haven. The British coaling stations would, of course, be shut to French war vessels. In conformity with China's demand that Great Britain should fulfil the duties of a neutral power towards both belligerents. Let us suppose, however, that in the obstacles seemingly insuperable, and at the risk of exhausting her own resources, France contrived to make her blockade effectual, the ensuing paralysis of the British trade with China would provoke such discontent in England and would so rouse the historical dislike of her French neighbors, that the first specious pretext for intervention might be seized upon. It is also an ominous circumstance that Germany as well as Great Britain has something to lose by a French blockade of the Chinese ports, for we scarcely need to say that in the eyes of the French Foreign Office Bismarck's little finger, raised in admonition, would seem thicker than Gladstone's joins.

In brief, neither the Manchu dynasty, whose tenure of power at Peking may be said to hang upon a thread, nor the French Republic, which survives at every breeze from Berlin, can venture to indulge itself in the luxury of an expensive war. This being clear, it behooves them to come to terms as speedily as possible, no matter how mortifying may be the concessions reciprocally requisite; for while the diplomats are haggling at Paris, reinforcements are hurrying from France and China to the seat of hostilities in Tongkin, and at any moment a fresh collision and a new disaster may render the breach between the countries irreparable.

A MORNING SCENE.

About 8 o'clock yesterday morning a man smoking plug tobacco in an old clay pipe, walked out of a Michigan avenue saloon with a rat in a trap. He looked neither to the right or the left until he had reached the middle of the street. Then he placed the trap on the ground and whistled for his dog. If he had a dog, the animal did not respond, but the public did. In less than two minutes thirty men were rushing to the spot.

"Hi! there! Don't let him out till I get my dog," shouted one.

"Hold on! Wait for the dog!" yelled half a dozen voices at once.

"Keep cool and form a circle!" commanded a policeman, as he took a firmer grip of his baton.

The man with the trap spread a large handkerchief over it and waited. He was not a bit excited. On the contrary he was as placid as a chip sailing in the wash-dish.

"What's he up to?" inquired a newsboy.

"The placid man did not deign to reply.

"What'll ye take for him?" asked another, but his inquiry was treated with the same silent contempt.

Then four or five men came running up with dogs under their arms, and ten or fifteen dogs on foot followed behind. There was a fight between a bulldog and a Newfoundland, and there would have been a row between the owners had not a second policeman appeared. Order was finally restored. The dogs were arranged in a circle and held by their collars, and the placid man slowly knocked the ashes from his pipe, looked carefully around, and then raised the trap and shook the rat out. All the dogs made a rush, but in ten seconds each and every canine walked off on his ear and seemed to be hurt in his feelings. A boy stepped forward and held the rat up to view.

"It's a crockery rat!" he yelled as he whirled it away.

"Vas it was a grocery rat, and he cost me ten cents!" calmly replied the placid man as he walked off with his trap.—Detroit Free Press.
